TITLE

PAR I example: In Charles Murray's article "The 'No-Glory' Profession," he argues that many students today are not choosing engineering as a career because they believe it will not provide them with prestige and money. Students do still choose to pursue engineering degrees because they would like to work in the automotive industry or because they have long had a love of engineering. Murray explains that college students are choosing to pursue business degrees instead of engineering ones because they believe they will eventually receive a higher paycheck with an MBA. This might lead one to wonder whether pursuing a degree in engineering is worthwhile today. Is engineering a "no-glory" profession, as compared to other popular professional career paths?

PAR II: Explain some reasons why students are choosing business degrees, or choosing academic paths that might lead to law school, or choosing liberal arts.

PAR III: Explain the other side and offer some reasons why students choose engineering today.

PAR IV: Perhaps refers to some more of Murray's ideas on this issue.

PAR V: As you classmate Logan said, a way to end the paper would be reiterate: In light of all of this, the question still remains: You would need a few sentences to lead in to this concluding question.
